A question we are repeatedly asked is what's the best music to study to? The music one normally enjoys is the most common belief. Many prefer their usual music playlists to listen to. Playing your regular tracks that usually make you feel better is not always the best music for studying. Your personal choice in music can work great during leisure or workout but can be distracting when your concentration and attention needs to be on your education and not on catchy upbeat tunes with vocals. The right type of music can also elevate one's mood and motivate the student to study harder and longer. The ultimate music to study to is relaxing music that doesn't disturb the student, like calm background music. Instrumental music that is popular music without any vocals. Relaxing piano, calming guitar and peaceful native American flute music will make it easier to absorb knowledge and thus enhancing your performance during exams etcetera. Music that you are ambivalent about, neither like or dislike could be the best choice for you. The music should not distract you with lyrics that diverts, only serene wordless relaxing music for studying. The noise level should be at a moderate level, for the most ideal study environment and for creative thinking to take place. High noise levels are distracting and can reduce the brain's ability to process valuable information. Some students can have difficulties studying at school and libraries because of loud people or noisy study-environments. However, listening to study music with headphones on can be helpful in masking loud and unwanted sounds.

Classical music is the original music for relaxation, with master musicians and composers like Chopin, Beethoven and Mozart, has through the centuries provided us with powerful classical piano music and of course other beautiful instrumental music like clarinet, violin, cello, guitar, harp and flute. Classical music is generally regarded by experts as the best music to study to, because of the so-called Mozart effect. The popular idea that listening to Mozart study music will make you intelligent and creative, thus a better student. We believe that Classical music for studying is the most ideal music to study to and with alpha brain waves enhancing the positive effect of the sound makes it even more suited for students. So, classic music is without a doubt the best choice of music for studying.

The goal with brainwave entrainment is to cause the brain waves of the student to fall into step with the intermitted stimulus having a frequency corresponding to the intended brain state, which in this case is alpha brain waves. Binaural beats incorporate several frequencies for different purposes that can be divided into four main groups: 1) alpha brain waves, 2) beta brain waves, 3) delta brain waves and 4) theta brain waves. Since we want to concentrate better, improve our memory and get the best grades possible, we are therefore interested in the first group only. Relaxing music for studying with alpha binaural beats works as an excellent study aid. Improvement have been shown on student groups that listened regularly to study-music, so you can rest assure it works and will make you a more motivated and successful student.
